British Jews gird for fight

By JANICE ARNOLD

MONTREAL —

With a general election that could be called as early as October, British Jewry is arming itself for an all-out campaign against the racist National Front which is expected to field about 500 candidates.

Lord Fisher of Camden said in an interview with The Canadian Jewish News that the Board of Deputies of British Jews, of which he is president, has had no trouble in raising enough funds to publish material to counter the National Front's anti-Semitism.

As a recognized political party, the National Front will be entitled to free radio and television time during the electoral campaign, just like the two major parties — Labor and Conservative — as well as exposure in the press, said Fisher, in Montreal to address a dinner in honor of Sam Berger sponsored by the Canadian Friends of Bar-Ilan University.

"Although it uses the 'colored' problem as its major target, the National Front has been clearly anti-Semitic from the beginning," said Fisher. "Jews are depicted as the exploiters, they own everything, they have an influence beyond their numbers and there is nothing legal to stop them from saying these things as a group."

The Jewish community has found some comfort in the fact that the Labor, Conservative and smaller Liberal party are using the material issued by the 220-year-old Board of Deputies, the spokesman, for the 400,000 Jews in the United Kingdom said. "They are beginning to realize how dangerous the National Front is."

Fisher noted that in the "acid test" for a general election — the municipal elections — the National Front did not win a single seat although it had about 700 candidates.

However Fisher warned as long as the economic picture in Britain remains bleak the National Front and other Nazi groups will remain popular.

"A poor economic situation is the greatest single factor. The Nazis have been historically suited to this kind of background — they have all the answers, they make every promise under the sun."

Not only the unemployed or poor sectors of the population are attracted to the National Front. "Dissatisfied Labor supporters or the middle class who think the Conservatives may not be strong enough, are in some cases throwing their support behind the National Front."

Fisher called the rise of the National Front a "formidable" threat to Jews and compared it to the time of Sir Oswald Mosley in the 1930s. The National Front is known to receive financial support from Libya and probably other Arab countries.

New job for Ain in CJF

By MEL SOLMAN

MONTREAL —

The first Canadian office of the Council of Jewish Federations will open in Toronto on July 4 with Montreal-born Steve Ain as director.

Ain, who leaves his position as national executive director of the Canadian Jewish Congress, will take on the combined role of resource person and consultant for the 11 Canadian cities organized as Jewish federations or community councils.

A major part of Ain's role as director will be to draw on the expertise of the 18 professional staff people from the New York offices of CJF, adapting their recommendations for Canadian needs.

The Canadian office he heads will oversee the work of two committees. The larger of the committees, representing the 11 major Jewish centres as well as national organizations, will meet several times a year to discuss overall policy.

The smaller steering committee, consisting of eight lay people and the executive director of Allied Jewish Community Services and the Toronto Jewish Congress, will be involved in detailed planning for community needs.

Milton Harris, immediate past president of the TJC, will serve as chairman of the Canadian office of CJF.

Ain emphasized that, while there was an overlap in problems across the country, each community had unique difficulties requiring specialized study. He noted that solutions have often been found to problems in one community, but words of these breakthroughs have not been passed on to other Jewish centres. The most basic function of the new office of CJF, according to Ain, will be to improve channels of communication between communal organizations in different cities.

Along these lines is his responsibility of gathering and distributing information to Jewish communities on federal funds available for projects in multiculturalism, housing, health and welfare, and recreation. Other areas of concern are leadership training programs, Jewish immigration to Canada, education material for Jewish schools and placement of Jewish communal personnel.

Cry is 'never again' as demonstrators denounce racism

By HARVEY WARREN and MEL SOLMAN

Jews in Montreal and Toronto turned out at protest rallies against the aborted march of American Nazis in Skokie, Ill., over the weekend. Holocaust survivors, Christian figures and communal leaders in both cities issued warnings about the threat of racism to a free society and vowed to counter its resurgence.

In Toronto, some 2,000 people participated in a demonstration at Earl Bales Park, which was interrupted by an outburst from a Miami rabbi advocating physical violence to counter the Nazis.

About 200 Montrealers were in the auditorium of the Jewish Public Library to hear speakers denounce the right wing British National Front, an anti-black, anti-Jewish body, and admonish the revival of its Ontario ideological twin, the Western Guard.

An erroneous report that the library meeting had been cancelled contributed to the small attendance, it was learned.

The tone of the Toronto demonstration was colored by the scuffle which ensued after American Rabbi Shimon Lerner interrupted Canadian Jewish Congress President Rabbi W. Gunther Plaut, shouting: "You can't demonstrate against them (the Nazis). You beat their heads in."

Several spectators pushed Lerner away from the platform and through the crowd, as bystanders punched, kicked and spat on him. Carrying a baseball bat, the Jewish Defence League supporter appeared flushed, but uninjured, and remarked, "If Jews would respond this way to Nazis, there'd be no Nazis."

Joint Community Relations Chairman Rabbi Jordan Pearlson pointed out the hypocrisies of U.S. legislation. "I submit to you, the law is an ass," he said. While name-calling can be considered an assault under U.S. law, he noted, marching through a neighborhood of concentration camp survivors in Nazi uniforms is freedom of expression.

Harry Simon, chairman of the Anti-Nazi Committee of the Canadian Jewish Congress, Central Region, said "we should not allow them (Nazis) to carry on in a free society to preach genocide and racism." At the end of his speech he cried, "down with Nazism and fascism and long live the brotherhood of man."

Bromley Armstrong, past president of the Jamaican Canadian Association and an Ontario Human Rights commissioner, also called the law "an ass" and said the slogan "Never forgotten — Never again" should be "imbedded" in the heads of the Nazis. Armstrong said the fight against Nazism was "a fight of all free men the world over."

The Nazis should be told, Armstrong said, that "we are aware and ready to meet them on their own grounds." He pledged the support of the black community in the fight against Nazism.

Lord Fisher of Camden, president of the Board of Deputies of British Jews, suggested Jewish organizations get together, as they have done in the United Kingdom, to begin a massive education publication campaign. "You must be originators," he said. "Work together to see that the evil of Nazism is destroyed as quickly as possible...Fascism must not be allowed to benefit from the freedoms of democracy."

Other speakers at the rally were Peter Jones, president of the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews; Clifford Pilkey, president of the Ontario Federation of Labor and Jacob Egit, executive secretary of the United Organization for Histadrut.

In Montreal, Congress Executive Vice-President Alan Rose denounced the National Front and its North American manifestations. "Any groups which march publicly for no other purpose than to incite racial hatred," he said, "should have restraints placed on them if the world is not to see a repetition of the Hitler era."

Don't destroy our unity, Wurzburger tells Carter

TORONTO —

The head of the largest rabbinic body in the Western Hemisphere has appealed to President Carter not to attempt to undermine the unity of the Jewish community in its solid commitment to the security of the state of Israel.

Rabbi Walter S. Wurzburger, president of the Rabbinical Council of America, representing more than 1,000 Orthodox rabbis in the United States and Canada, made his remarks at the opening dinner of the annual convention at the Constellation Hotel.

Wurzburger told several hundred delegates: "No matter how widely American Jews differ in their evaluation of policies advocated by the Israeli government, they remain committed and united behind the state of Israel in its yearnings to achieve peace and security. It is our basic conviction that decisions affecting the security of the state cannot be made for Israel even by well-meaning friends abroad and must be made exclusively by the citizens of the sovereign state of Israel.

"The only way to achieve peace is through direct negotiations between the parties concerned. American Jews categorically repudiate any suggestion that peace can be secured through the imposition of a settlement, whether the terms are dictated by President Sadat or by friendly powers which arrogate themselves the right to act paternalistically toward Israel."

Regarding American Jewry's relationship to Israel, Wurzburger pointed out that "American Jews have every right to express responsible dissent with respect to Israeli policies, but they have no right to exert any form of pressure which might lead to the adoption of policies which, from Israel's perspective, are detrimental to her viability as a free and democratic state."

Turning to the internal affairs of Jewish community life, he sharply criticized "the elected officials of religious and secular Jewish organizations who abdicate their sacred responsibilities and have entrusted major policy decisions to professionals who seem to function autonomously without lay involvement.

"In many instances, the supposed leaders are reduced to that of cheer leaders for the bureaucracy that dominates Jewish organizational life. These professional civil servants formulate policies, allocate budgets and distribute funds and, in general, orient the ideological posture of their organizations in a manner which may not reflect the feelings of a majority of their membership.

"In order to capture the confidence of the Jewish community," Wurzburger continued, "Jewish elected leaders must reassume responsibility for the policies of their organization and be responsive to the democratically expressed opinions of their membership.

"It is high time," he added, "that the rank and file of American Jewry begin to appreciate that a bland diet of efforts to provide a modicum of marginal identification with the Jewish community cannot sustain meaningful Jewish life. Instead of placing a premium upon blind conformity to the views of so-called authorities, American Jews must be encouraged not to confuse loyalty with blanket acceptance of officially sanctioned safe views."

Wurzburger also advocated the "de-politicization of religious movements in order to help bring about the spiritualization of politics." Religious movements should be more concerned with self-criticism than with downgrading the achievements of competing ideologies or gloating over their failures, he remarked.

Ontario plans Israel mission

TORONTO —

For the first time, a trade mission officially sponsored by the Ontario government, will be visiting Israel. The Ontario Capital Projects Mission will arrive in Tel Aviv July 7 from Teheran, the first stop on the trip which started Wednesday.

In making the announcement this week, Ontario Industry and Tourism Minister John Rhodes promised there will be other and larger missions to Israel. The Canada-Israel Chamber of Commerce and Industry under the direction of Lou Ronson, president of the Ontario region, has been working with the ministry in organizing the Israeli part of the mission.

Taking part in this trip are officials of the ministry, Franklin Electric of Canada Ltd., Associated Tube Industries Ltd., Kappele Wright & Macleod Ltd. and Maloney Electric Corp.

Nazi propaganda is seized in Bonn

BONN [JTA] —

Police in Scharzfeld in north Germany's Harz region raided several homes and autos recently, recovering large supplies of Nazi emblems and neo-Nazi propaganda.

This included pamphlets condoning the murder of former Italian Prime Minister and Christian Democratic leader Aldo Moro and former German federal state attorney Siegfried Buback, and calling for the killings of former Bavarian State Premier Wilhelm Hoeger, who participated in the Nuremberg trials, and of a top German internal security official.

A man in possession of a pistol was taken into provisional custody. The raid took place following a rally in Scharzfeld of the ultra-right-wing Independent Circle of Friends (ICF) organization.

Supporters distributed a special edition of the Voelkischer Beobachter, which used to be the Nazi Party's official newspaper.

Quebec Jews are said fearful staying put may be too costly

By LEWIS LEVENDEL
— Associate Editor

TORONTO —

The Quebec Jew fears the price of being a Quebecois may be too expensive to pay, the annual convention of the Central Conference of American Rabbis was told this week.

There is anxiety among the Jewish community because of "a feeling of a dirth in leadership, a feeling of not being sure of the price of remaining in Quebec and if it's worth paying, and a feeling of one's diminished integrity in the eyes of the powers that be," said Montreal Rabbi Edward S. Treister, of Temple Rodeph Shalom. Text of his speech was made available to the CJN prior to delivery.

More than 500 delegates, representing about 1,300 Reform rabbis who serve more than a million Jews in the U.S., Canada and abroad, were at the convention at the Harbor Castle Hilton.

Treister told an overflow gathering in a session on "The Situation in Quebec," that he was disturbed "that as Jews we delight in Jewish supremacy in Israel, and are dismayed by the implications of French supremacy in Quebec. We must become exorcised over both places — both or neither.

"If a Jew insists on Israel's right to take whatever measures the majority feels necessary to insure the survival of Israel as a Jewish state, surely he must grant the same right to the franco-Quebecer," he said.

He said the Jewish community in Quebec has three character types in its midst — the francophone, the francophile, and the francophobe.

The francophone, essentially 20,000 Sephardim, have no real problem with the pro-French linguistic and cultural legislation, he said. They tend to identify more with the franco-Quebec Catholic than with the anglo-Quebec Jew. By and large, the francophone Jew is being integrated into an increasingly secular Quebec society and finding for himself a fairly comfortable niche, he said.

The francophile Jews are Ashkenazim whose response is one of general agreement with social, cultural and economic aspirations of his French fellow citizens. "But the fact is the Jewish community has never participated individually or collectively in the life of the province as fully as it might have...Quebec is his (the francophile's) home and Quebec is where he intends to stay. His concern is Jewish cultural survival, not English cultural survival."

The francophobe is worried — about his future and about living in a French milieu, he continued. With all the questions, with all the uncertainties, he is very apt to say: 'Who needs it,' and go elsewhere.

Treister said he has discovered that the more mobile and younger one is, the more likely "one is to be pessimistic about the future." The older one is and the more committed financially to life in Quebec, the more optimistic one tends to be.

In the same session, Rabbi W. Gunther Plaut, president of the Canadian Jewish Congress and senior scholar of Holy Blossom Temple, said that "unless there will be a radical turning of events the majority of Quebec Jews will remain."

He added that "even though there may be no anti-Semitism and no negative feelings directed their way, Jews will be, with all their civil liberties intact, the outgroup."

Plaut stressed, in a text prepared for delivery, that a great Jewish community will exist in Montreal unless an extreme right wing element with strong anti-Semitic feeling takes over in Quebec.

Other speakers at the session were Montreal Rabbis Mark Golub and Bernard Bloomstone whose remarks

Javits remark attacked

NEW YORK [JTA] — Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R. NY) received scathing criticism from some Jewish organizations, but guarded support from others for his speech on the Senate floor in which he said that Israel's response to the American questions on the future status of the West Bank and Gaza Strip was "a disappointment."

The most vociferous denunciation came from the American Jewish Congress which accused the senator, one of Israel's most consistent and staunchest Congressional supporters, of "climbing aboard the 'Let's put more pressure on Israel' bandwagon."

The AJCongress said it "strongly" disagrees "with his statement that it is up to Israel to 'come forward with a more precise statement of its views.'"

According to the AJCongress "Israel has offered a far-reaching proposal for a solution of the West Bank issue...It is up to those who claim to speak for the residents of the West Bank and Gaza — not Israel — to give a 'precise statement' of their views. Sen. Javits would have been better advised to offer his advice to the leaders of Jordan and Egypt. Israel's plan is on the table. Let the others now respond," the AJCongress said.

But Rabbi Alexander Schindler, chairman of the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations said Javits' speech "makes many valid points." He added, however, "I wish he had made the resumption of negotiations the focus. Why should Israel make more and more clarification before the process of negotiations?" Schindler asked.

Hyman Bookbinder, Washington representative of the American Jewish Committee, noted that Javits is "a very very good friend of Israel." He added that he hope the senator's remarks would encourage the Israeli government to offer "further clarification" regarding the future of the West Bank and Gaza.

However, Harold M. Jacobs, president, and Fred Ehrman, chairman, of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America, asked Javits to reconsider his position on Israel's response.

Jacobs observed that "social and political changes may occur" during the period of autonomy for the West Bank and Gaza Strip that Israel has proposed and therefore "it would be very unwise for Israel to commit itself to a specific course of action five years from now."

Prime Minister Menachem Begin and Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan stop to chat during a break in a recent Israeli cabinet meeting in Jerusalem. Later, both the cabinet and the Knesset voted to delay a decision on the permanent status of the occupied Arab territories of the West Bank and Gaza, for five years. The decision was regarded a political victory for Begin, who has refused to accept an outright commitment to give up the territories.

DMC splinter group formed to counteract doveish faction

JERUSALEM [JTA] — Five members of the Democratic Movement for Change (DMC) who support the Begin government's policies, have formed a new faction within their party as a counterweight to the doveish Shinui (Change) faction that opposes the government.

The five — Akiva Noff, Binyamin Halevi, Assaf Yaguri, Shafik Assad and Shlomo Eliyahu — walked out of the Knesset chamber last week prior to the vote on the cabinet's reply to the American questions on the future of the West Bank and Gaza Strip. They were protesting their party's decision to abstain which prevented them from voting in favor of the cabinet's reply.

The new group stressed that its credo is "action, not words." It is assumed by political observers that if the DMC was to quit the Likud-led coalition, the five members would leave the party. Members of the Shinui faction believe, in that event, the dissenters would defect to Likud.

Begin in good physical health

JERUSALEM [JTA] — Menachem Begin's personal physician, Dr. Mervyn S. Gotsman, chief of the cardiac department of the Hadassah Medical Center here, told reporters that "Mr. Begin is in good physical condition and is carrying out his normal, full daily duties."

He said that "the articles that have recently appeared in this country and abroad questioning the prime minister's health are totally without foundation."

Gotsman summoned newsmen to the prime minister's office to read them his statement on Begin's health in response to widespread reports in recent weeks that Begin's physical condition was precarious and he was unable to function properly.

"I feel it necessary to make specific references to two misleading and, in my professional view, irresponsible reports that appeared this week in Time magazine and two weeks ago in the London Evening Standard. Those reports are based upon imaginary conditions which do not represent Mr. Begin's state of health. Mr. Begin is well and none of his physical conditions in any way impair the conduct of his normal daily activities or duties as prime minister," Gotsman said.

The Standard, in a report picked up by newspapers in the U.S. and other countries, claimed Begin was in need of heart surgery. Time correspondent David Halevi reported that Begin had blacked out during a recent cabinet meeting and had to be carried from the room.

Dr. Gotsman said "14 months ago, Mr. Begin suffered an acute myocardial infarction (heart attack) and since then has had two episodes of pericarditis. For many years he has been known to suffer from very mild chemical diabetes which has been controlled successfully by a minimal dose of oral anti-diabetic therapy. His blood sugar does not fluctuate."

Jewish activists Vladimir Slepak and Ida Nudel have recently been convicted, in separate Moscow trials, of "malicious hooliganism" relating to their attempts to emigrate to Israel. Slepak, a 50-year-old engineer, who was active in the small human rights movement in Moscow, was convicted in a short trial in which witnesses were forbidden. Ms. Nudel, who had hung a sign from her apartment saying "KGB give me my visa," was tried and sentenced to four years, while Slepak received five years in exile.

Police shield 20 Nazis at Chicago 'victory rally'

CHICAGO [JTA] — Shielded from an angry crowd of several thousand counter-demonstrators by some 900 Chicago police, Nazi leader Frank Collin, led a group of about 20 Nazis in a "victory rally" in front of the Kluczynski Federal Building in the heart of downtown Chicago.

Wearing storm trooper uniforms and holding wooden shields, the Nazis stood expressionless while onlookers shouting "kill the Nazis," pelted them with rocks, eggs, bottles and other debris. Their words inaudible over the chants of the crowd, the Nazis, after 10 minutes, clicked their heels, raised their arms in the Hitler salute, shouted "sieg heil" and marched back into the building.

The Nazis dubbed their appearance a "victory rally" because of a ruling by Federal Judge George Leighton dismissing a requirement of the Chicago Park District for posting a bond by the Nazis for permission to march in Marquette Park.

The Nazis cancelled their march in the heavily-Jewish populated suburb of Skokie scheduled for last Sunday and said they would march in the racially volatile Marquette Park district, July 9.

Their rally here was scheduled for 4:30 p.m. local time but was delayed for 40 minutes while Chicago Police Superintendent James O'Grady tried to convince the Nazis to call it off because he could not guarantee their physical safety.

The Nazis refused and at about 6 p.m. they were escorted from the building by a heavy cordon of police.

Earlier, the men in storm trooper garb were secretly brought to the federal building in a U.S. mail truck which was seen by the counter-demonstrators but did not arouse their suspicions.

Asked if it was appropriate to use a government vehicle for that purpose, a police officer admitted the action was "questionable" but, he added, "it worked."

Security around the building was very tight. Close to 1,000 police, three rows deep, stood behind wooden barricades set up to insulate the Nazis from the thousands of spectators who appeared to be of all races and colors and from all over the country.

A police spokesman explained that the security precautions had to be taken to prevent threatened violent action by the counter-demonstrators.

Chicago Mayor Michael Bilandic observed the scene from a building adjacent to the rally site. Several arrests were made in isolated incidents before and after the Nazis appeared, including two members of the Jewish Defence League.

were not made available to The Canadian Jewish News as it went to press Tuesday.

At the opening banquet of the 89th CCAR convention, Monday evening, Rabbi Ely Pilchik, president of the body, hailed the Reform-Conservative unity which "shattered the Orthodox monolith" at the recent World Zionist Congress in Jerusalem. He said his fellow rabbis want to continue expanded co-operation with the Conservative Movement "in every endeavor."

The resolution stated that all departments and programs of the World Zionist Organization, including education, shall be administered "with the principle of equal standing and equal treatment for every religious movement within Zionism." Educational programs, Pilchik pointed out, had been in the hands of Orthodox Judaism.

In a press conference on Tuesday, Pilchik told reporters he did not wish to answer questions on Quebec, saying "it would be presumptuous of the organization of predominantly American rabbis to say more."

Also at the press conference he lashed out at the Jewish Defence League, calling it "an undisciplined, irresponsible group not in the mainstream, doing more trouble than good."

Although, coincidentally, the international body of Orthodox rabbis was meeting in the city at the same time, Pilchik said there was no contact at all.

He stated he had close contacts with Rabbi Walter Wurzburger, president of the Synagogue Council of America, but there were "very sharp differences" between the groups.

"The two organizations are in a constant state of confrontation, but not on a personal basis. Some of my best friends are Orthodox rabbis," said Rabbi Joseph Glazer, executive vice-president of the CCAR, with a smile.

"The ideological conflict between the two groups has sharpened this past year regarding our approaches to Israel," said Pilchik. "We call for pluralism in Israel. It's a democracy and it must be a democracy religiously."

Nobel merited

WASHINGTON [JTA] — Sen. Henry M. Jackson (D. Wash.) and seven of his colleagues have proposed a bipartisan Senate resolution to support the nomination of the Helsinki human rights monitoring group in the Soviet Union for this year's Nobel Peace Prize.

The resolution presented by Jackson named the following Soviet citizens "of various faiths and nationalities" as meriting the Nobel award: Yuri Orlov; Alexander Ginzburg; Anatoly Scharansky; Vladimir Slepak; Naum Meiman; Father Yankunin; Olexy Pikhy; Mykola Rudenko; Pyotor Vins; and Lenea Bonner, wife of Nobel Laureate Andrei Sakharov.

Rallies vow 'never again'

Rose said that those who preach genocide, hatred or violence have no right to claim freedom of speech as justification for their statements or actions. Although he stressed that conditions in 1978 did not match those of the 1930s, he warned of the growing fascist movements in Britain and Western Europe.

Noting that the Christian world was now more vocal in its protests against fascism and neo-Nazism than it had been in the Hitler era, Rose reminded the audience that millions of Christians had also been killed by the Nazis. "Anti-Semitism," he said, "is the precursor of Nazism, and fascism. Over 33 million people were killed in World War II and all that began with a group of brownshirts marching in the streets of Munich."

Canon Malcom A. Hughes, of the Montreal diocese, told the audience that many countries preferred to stand on the sidelines while others "do the dirty work" to preserve democracy and justice. "It is the responsibility of every person to fight injustice," he said, "an injustice to one is an injustice to all." He warned of the growing trend which saw religious intolerance and racism as socially acceptable.

Association of Survivors of Nazi Oppression President Abba Beer said that the cancellation of the Nazi march in Skokie was no reason to rejoice or be complacent. The cancer of Nazism and anti-Semitism, he said, was spreading throughout the world. The Canadian government's anti-hate laws, he also exclaimed, were "toothless and impotent."

The possibility for the right wing Ontario organization, the Western Guard, to gain legal status as a political party under a new name, was proof of this, he said.

"The revival of Nazism is not a problem only for survivors or Jews, but for all decent people. The danger of this revival must not be minimized."

Yariv says the reply to U.S. on territories was 'vague'

By VIVIEN SHARON

TORONTO — The Begin government's reply to U.S. questions concerning the permanent status of the occupied territories, was "vague" and has left future relations between Israel, Jordan and the Palestinians wide open.

That is the opinion of Israel's former chief of military intelligence, Aharon Yariv, who had hoped that a more definite response would have injected life into the deadlocked peace negotiations.

Currently director-general of Tel Aviv University's Institute of Strategic Studies, the former cabinet minister said that the Labor Party or Democratic Movement for Change would have been prepared to discuss "permanent status" or "sovereignty".

(Washington had sought commitment from Jerusalem that Israel would discuss "the permanent status" of the territories after the five-year transition period mapped out in the Begin peace plan. The cabinet statement last week said Israel would negotiate "the nature of future relations" after five years of limited Palestinian self-rule, opposing now a binding commitment on a final settlement.)

Yariv, interviewed here during the course of a 24-hour whirlwind tour to Toronto and New York for Israel Bonds, said he favored political self-expression for Palestinians within a federated framework including Israel and Jordan.

But he expressed definite opposition to the establishment of a Palestinian state on the West Bank. "It would be very dangerous to Israel. It would encourage the Palestinians in their endeavors for the creation of a secular, democratic state of Palestine."

A former minister of information in the Rabin cabinet, Yariv warned that if peace efforts fail, there will be a definite danger of war in the Mideast. "War may not come immediately," he said, "nor will it take the same shape and form of the Yom Kippur War." But, in the same breath, he added that we should not give up on peace either.

He said that, in order to achieve peace, the United States must serve as the intermediary. "I don't think that we will make much headway with Sadat. As long as he feels that he is in the privileged position — being on the same side as the Americans — we (Israel) won't get any mileage out of him."

With regard to the return of territories, Yariv said that Jews all over the world should realize that decisions on this matter, made by the Israeli government, bear many risks vis-a-vis the peace problem.

Commenting on Diaspora Jewry, he said that it should inform Israel of public opinion, media and government attitudes, in their respective countries, toward Mideast issues.

But he expressly stated that Jews outside Israel do not have the right to criticize because "criticism of validity is only criticism when you share (physical) responsibility, and Israel will either suffer or enjoy the fruits of her decisions."

Reassess Soviet ties

By JANICE ARNOLD

MONTREAL [Staff] — The Canadian government has been asked to "reassess" the agenda of the Canada-USSR mixed commission in light of the violation of the Helsinki accords by the Soviet Union.

The recommendation was made in a brief submitted to the Canadian Parliamentary Helsinki group by McGill law professor Irwin Cotler at a recent meeting in Ottawa between representatives of the Canadian Committee for the Release of Anatoly Scharansky and the Helsinki group.

The meeting was convened because of the escalation of terror against the Moscow Helsinki group, which like the Canadian group, monitors the Soviet Union's implementation of the Helsinki accords, and against Soviet Jews in particular.

(Cotler presented his brief before the sentencing to internal exile of Jewish activists Vladimir Slepak and Ida Nudel. He forwarded an addendum to his presentation last week telling the parliamentarians that the recent sentences have "exposed the true face of Gulag justice.")

"As all this has ominous implications for the fate of Anatoly Scharansky, the meeting assumed a certain sense of urgency," said Cotler.

Scharansky, who has been in detention for six months, is expected to be tried soon on charges of treason.

Established in 1971, the mixed commission is the framework for co-operative endeavors and exchanges between Canada and the Soviet Union in seven major areas — science, education, the arts, cinematography, television and radio, sports, and tourism.

"We are basically saying that because the commission was set up in the spirit of the Helsinki accords, then given the Soviet Union's violation we should reassess our part in the commission," Cotler told The Canadian Jewish News.

Other recommendations contained in the brief included that: the Canadian Helsinki group make representations to the Soviet ambassador; appoint an observer to attend the Scharansky trial should a trial be held; conduct hearings into the implementation of the Helsinki accords and its implications for Canada-USSR relations; initiate joint declarations of support and concern for the Moscow Helsinki group with other counterpart monitoring groups in the United States, Europe and elsewhere, and raise the cause of Soviet Jewry and human rights in international agencies charged with the implementation of human rights, such as the United Nations committee to the covenant on civil and political rights.

The Canadian group has already implemented the first two recommendations: meeting with the Soviet ambassador and appointing an observer to the Scharansky trial.

Attending the meeting with Cotler were Donald Davis and Barbara Stern, co-ordinators of the Canadian Committee for the Release of Anatoly Scharansky, and Martin Penn, executive-director of the Montreal Committee for Soviet Jewry of Canadian Jewish Congress.

British Jews girding for fight to oppose racist National Front

"The Nazis are crying for freedom but the question has come down to 'do we have the freedom to destroy the freedom that exists?' The answer is turning to no and I think all decent people are behind the Jewish community."

On the Arab boycott, Fisher said he thought the select committee on foreign boycotts, which reports to the House of Lords on incidents of British firms complying with the boycott of Israel, will be unsuccessful in getting the government to introduce anti-boycott legislation.

"Neither the government nor the Opposition is in favor of it. In some cases this is due to a genuine fear for the economy, in others just ill-will...while the economy is as it is we will just have to understand the government's position."

Fisher, one of 23 Jewish peers, has been mayor of three London boroughs and was the first Jewish mayor of Stoke-Newington. He is also presently chairman of the board of governors of World Jewish Congress, as well as being associated with numerous other Jewish concerns.

At the dinner, held in the Shaar Hashomayim Synagogue, Fisher praised the efforts of the Canadian friends to build an Institute of Holocaust Studies at Bar-Ilan, the first of its kind.

"Everywhere neo-Nazism is evident...memorials are not enough to prevent the Holocaust from being belittled or distorted."

Berger, 78, owner of the Montreal Alouettes and prominent civic and Jewish community leader in Ottawa, was elevated to the rank of honorary fellow of Bar-Ilan at the dinner, which was chaired by Philip F. Vineberg.

Berger was honored for his outstanding service to the city of Ottawa, devotion to the Jewish community and interest in the State of Israel, as well as his leadership in the development of professional sport in Canada.

The fellowship was conferred by former Montrealer Rabbi Tsemach M. Zambrowsky, vice-chairman of the international board of trustees of Bar-Ilan, who said: "It is befitting for a university dedicated to humanity, morality and faith in science and technology to honor a man who dedicated his life to sportsmanship."

Abe Chodos, president of the Montreal chapter of the Canadian Friends, Cantor M. Fogel, Israel Consul Shalom Hadaya, Berger's son David and Lawrence Freiman of Ottawa, honorary president of the Canadian Zionist Federation, also participated.

Winnipeg family agency faces increasing deficit

By A.J. ARNOLD

WINNIPEG — Winnipeg's Jewish Child and Family Service finds itself in a tighter bind this year than a year ago as a result of increased deficits, according to figures, reported at its annual meeting.

The financial statement for the year ending March 31, 1978, showed an operating deficit of $89,757, up from $20,392 the previous year. At the same time, the accumulated deficit of the agency increased to $150,097 from $90,915 the previous year.

The major part of the accumulated deficit is from the children's department, which depends on the Manitoba government and the United Way for its main funding.

Because the JCFS is a private sectarian agency the government and the United Way have refused, in the past number of years, to provide full funding for the administrative and general costs of the children's department. Their primary concern has been to cover only direct care costs.

The rest of the accumulated deficit is attributable to the family department of the agency. This has been covered in the current year by the Jewish Community Council with an additional grant of $14,022. The ongoing costs of the family department are funded mainly by the Jewish Community Council and Canadian Jewish Congress.

Leslie Gilfix, treasurer, told the annual meeting that the agency cannot continue to operate with an increasing deficit. If the funding situation does not improve shortly, he warned, the agency "will have no choice but to curtail operations in the children's department."

Nonetheless, Gilfix expressed optimism that the situation may improve in the near future because of "very positive indications" that the Manitoba government will provide extra funds for the department.

The true feelings of the agency's key supporters, however, came out in a panel discussion, highlighted by the comments of Phil Schachter, a past president.

Schachter said the JCFS was somewhat in the position of "a ball being tossed back and forth between the United Way and the government and its natural parent" — the Jewish community.

There would always be problems in getting government support, he said, because "if the government doesn't change, the ministers change."

"Even if we cut our functions, we will still have overheads and deficits," he stated. "The board cannot cut functions to fit the finances but they have to produce the funds to meet the needs. We will have to go out to the community again," he repeated.

The 90-minute, open-air concert was taped on the anniversary, May 15, in a spectacular setting in the valley at the foot of the Citadel of David, near the walls of the Old City of Jerusalem. The conductor is Zubin Mehta, musical director of the IPO.

The international roster of soloists includes Mstislav Rostropovich, cello, Itzhak Perlman and Isaac Stern, violins, Daniel Barenboim, piano, Jean-Pierre Rampal, flute, and Leontyne Price, soprano.

The varied musical program consists of movements from Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5 (Emperor), the concerto for two violins and orchestra by J.S. Bach, Tchaikovsky's Rococo Variations for cello and orchestra and a group of arias from Aida by Verdi. The grand finale will be a performance by the orchestra of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture, climaxed by a huge fireworks display.

Salute to Israel has been made available to the CBC through the co-operation of the Israel Broadcasting Authority.

Naked discrimination

The Jewish community of Canada is properly outraged by the recent statement of Prime Minister Trudeau regarding the Arab boycott. His reluctance to introduce legislation forbidding the heinous boycott activities is a serious blow to the civic integrity of the Jews of Canada.

The effect of the prime minister's policy declaration in this matter is, on the one hand, a clear repudiation of the government's [illegible] and, on the other, an imprimatur conferred on companies wishing to discriminate against Canadian citizens of the Jewish faith.

When the leader of a nation legitimizes discriminatory practices against one group of citizens, it becomes apparent that the moral foundations of the country in question have been severely subverted.

The Jewish community of Canada has come a long way since the '30s of this century when restrictive clauses against Jews were the normal practices in manufacturing, trading and education. To reverse this situation took 40 years of struggle.

Change did come and a general mood of enlightenment has brought benefits to all segments of Canadian society. With one thoughtless remark, however, the prime minister of Canada has attempted to revoke 40 years of progress in the human relations sphere by disenfranchising over 300,000 Canadian citizens.

It is not enough for Mr. Trudeau to seek refuge in the specious argument that Canadian firms seeking government support will be denied financial and other assistance if they comply with the Arab boycott.

Any company incorporated in this country is the recipient of tax benefits and other advantages generated by the average taxpayers of this country. Whether or not it asks the federal government for assistance in doing business with Mideast countries it is, by virtue of its incorporated status, beholden to the citizens of this country.

As concerned citizens, Canadian Jews must express their abhorrence of a situation in which companies, which they support indirectly through tax contributions, are able to single them out and exclude them from employment possibilities.

The attitude of the present government of Canada towards the Arab boycott of Canadian Jews is the litmus paper test of its integrity. To this point it has shown lamentably a cynicism once thought to be the exclusive preserve of totalitarian regimes.

Mr. Trudeau's position is inexcusable. It must be changed. Legislation is the only answer.

Arab intransigence

Cooler heads are beginning to appreciate the real reasons for the lack of progress in Mideast peace talks — the intransigence of the Arab nations.

President Sadat has attempted through bluster and pressure on both the Israelis and Americans to extract from Menachem Begin concessions of such magnitude that they would spell the end of the state of Israel. In return, the Egyptian leader has refused to budge from the extremist Arab demands of the last decade.

In conversations with Westerners, Egyptian government representatives speak solemnly about the "legitimate rights" of the Palestinians. When asked to define those rights, the former respond that definition is up to the Palestinians.

The definitions provided by Palestinians thus far are hardly congenial enough to appease the apprehensions of Israel. From the PLO covenant of 1968 and from Yasser Arafat's indecent claim of responsibility for the Tel Aviv bus massacre of this year, the Israelis have learned how to translate the terms "legitimate rights." In the Palestinian lexicon, it means the physical annihilation of Israel's citizens.

Israel must be excused, therefore, if it hesitates to rush into a suicidal pact which would sanction the creation of a Palestinian state adjacent to its already porous borders.

Far more disturbing, however, is the report presented recently by several participants in a recent Canadian Professors for Peace in the Mideast tour to Egypt, Jordan and Israel. Describing discussions with high officials of both the Egyptian and Jordanian governments, two Toronto professors have confirmed a view expressed by McGill University law teacher Irwin Cotler, namely, that the Arab conception of peace leaves no room for a Jewish or Zionist state in a future accord.

Arab spokesmen, brandishing the infamous UN resolution equating Zionism and racism, have asserted to visiting members of a CPPME delegation that Jews belong strictly to a religious grouping and deserve no national or political configuration. The only Israel they can envisage in a future peace settlement is a "de-Zionized" one in which citizens of Moslem, Christian and Jewish backgrounds mingle in amity and brotherhood.

It is incredible that such insane statements could be proferred by supposedly intelligent Egyptian and Jordanian officials in the wake of the fratricidal Moslem-Christian carnage that has despoiled Lebanon in the past four years and which continues to threaten the stability of that unfortunate nation.

One can perhaps excuse the reluctance of the Arabs to draw any conclusions from the consequences of the Lebanese debacle; what is unforgivable, however, is the eagerness of highly placed Arabs to instruct the Jewish people about its own nature and identity. It is high time for the former to remove the scales from their eyes and realize that Judaism cannot be limited to the perimeters of religious creed; they must recognize that our ancient civilization encompasses peoplehood, culture, language and historical memories.

Those are our legitimate rights; we must be permitted to define them ourselves.

Race with no finish

The arms makers of the United States, France and Britain are reaping a harvest of billions of dollars from the oil-rich nations of the Middle East, particularly Saudi Arabia which in the current fiscal year is spending a staggering $9.5 billion on military expenditures.

An article in Haaretz says the unprecedented strengthening of the Saudi Arabian military establishment will affect not only that country's military potential, but is likely to be of decisive significance in shaping the character of the regime in that desert kingdom.

Says the article: "In a number of realms the quantity of armaments flowing to Saudi Arabia exceeds that country's absorptive and operative capacity. The proximity of the military city of Tabuk — at which much of this weaponry is stockpiled — to Israel... highly increases the potential danger of Saudi Arabian intervention in any future conflict with Israel, and thus casts Saudi Arabia firmly in the role of another Arab 'confrontation' state."

The governments of the three major arms suppliers defend their military sales to Middle East nations by saying that essentially the weapons are for self-defence. This is hypocritical nonsense. The high-tension, inflammatory atmosphere in the Arab world makes possession of a huge, modern arsenal of weapons a danger of frightening proportions.

Israel wants an end to the arms race and this was the theme of a plea made to the United Nations by Israeli Ambassador Chaim Herzog. He urged that Israel and the Arab states meet and come to agreement on a reduction of armaments. The chances of this coming about are as slim as the prospect of the big powers agreeing to curb the insane race for more and better weapons of destruction.

Increasing the Arab potential for making war forces Israel to enlarge its own protective system. How long would Israel last if it falls behind its Arab neighbors in military capacity? The uneasy, fragile peace in the Middle East exists because Israel's enemies are well aware that the Jewish state is capable of exacting a price in Arab lives and property too high for those states to pay — unless arms superiority makes the gamble worthwhile.

The Carter policy of opening up sales of sophisticated weaponry to Saudi Arabia is a disservice to the cause of peace in this troubled part of the world.

Mark his words

Saul Hayes, former executive vice-president of Canadian Jewish Congress, is a man with a well-honed perspective on Jewish affairs in this country. His wise counsel on the matter of Quebec bears heeding. Mr. Hayes advises that nationalism should not be automatically viewed as a dirty word, nor should the Parti Quebecois mandate be equated with totalitarian Europe of the '30s and the Nazi regime.

"It can't be good just for the Jews," he said of nationalism recently, "and not for anyone else. It all depends on what form that nationalism takes... If we Jews talk so much about democracy, then we have to believe that in a democracy, it is the right of the majority to decide its future." It is hypocritical and a double standard, he suggests, to cry out for Jewish cultural survival while being unsympathetic to the aspirations of a francophone majority.

Calm and rationality ought to be the watchwords for the Jews in Quebec, says Mr. Hayes. That is commendable and seasoned guidance.

French, British scour Middle East to seek markets for military hardware

mideast analysis

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

Cairo's authoritative October magazine reported earlier this month that Saudi Arabia and France signed "the arms deal of the century" — a $24 billion agreement — during King Khaled's recent trip to Paris. As French and Saudi officials affixed their signatures on the documents enshrining the pact, British salesmen scoured the Middle East in search of new markets for the military equipment they were peddling.

Though the United States and the Soviet Union supply the Arabs and Israelis with the bulk of their weaponry, France and Britain continue to play an important secondary role. In global terms, France holds third place among world arms suppliers, with Britain relatively close behind.

According to French writer Pierre Gallois, the annual level of Paris' world-wide military exports doubled from $100 million in 1961 to about $2,00 million by the end of the decade. In the last six years, annual deliveries have exceeded the $500 million level, the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency claims. The best estimate is that weapons and other military equipment amounted to about 25% of total French capital goods exports, with some 65 countries — predominantly the Arabs — importing French military products.

By contrast, Britain's total foreign military sales increased from about $400 million in 1969 to nearly $1 billion annually by 1973, accounting for one-third or so of total British defence production, according to Armed Forces Journal International.

France has landed lucrative contracts with the Arabs since the Yom Kippur War and thus overtaken the British in total sales. Certainly, the $24 billion transaction will keep French assembly lines rolling for years to come.

In common with most Third World nations, Arab governments are arming themselves to the teeth to guard against real or imagined enemies. The Institute for Strategic Studies in London says Middle Eastern countries are spending an average 12.4% of gross national product on military material, compared with 6% for the U.S., and about 3.5% for the members of NATO. France and Britain — not to mention the United States — have used arms sales to offset the increased costs of oil and to expand their political and economic influence in the region.

Roger Pajak, a specialist on the international arms trade, writes in Middle East Review, that the popularity of French military equipment results from three key factors: the versatility of the weaponry, the competitive prices and "no questions asked" merchandizing and the government's strong support of the export program.

The Mirage jet, a plane made famous by Israel during the Six Day War, is the "meat and potatoes" of the French export drive. Manufactured by the Jewish-owned Dassault Company, the Mirage has proven to be an extremely popular product. A reported total of 1,500 had been produced, or were on order, for 17 countries as of 1974. Libya bought 110 in 1970 (some of which it transferred to Egypt during the 1973 war); Iraq ordered 72 in 1974; Saudi Arabia, Egypt and Lebanon have purchased over 100.

In addition to Mirages, France has sold the Arabs Matra Magic air-to-air missiles and Puma and Alouette helicopters.

Israel has 75 Mirages in its air force, but all of them were delivered before Charles de Gaulle imposed an embargo on the Jewish state shortly after the outbreak of the Six Day War. Since then, Israel has bought no French planes, partly because France has refused to sell Jerusalem arms. When France lifted its embargo on military sales to Middle Eastern "battlefield" countries in 1974, Israel was excluded. Nevertheless, Israel has been able to acquire spare parts for its fleet of Mirages through unofficial means.

France's arms industry employs 270,000 workers and, as Defence Minister Robert Galley remarked four years ago, "I have no intention of discontinuing our efforts to export and I have no reason to condemn French workers to unemployment in the name of a moral principle no country intends to respect."

The Middle East is Britain's best Third World market, but the British, unlike the French, exercise a modicum of morality in their dealings with the Arabs and Israelis.

London clamped an arms embargo on "battlefield" countries during the 1973 war, though some MPs complained that it affected Israel more than the Arabs. Eight months later, the government announced that it would consider the sale of weapons to the area "that did not threaten a lasting settlement ..."

Despite the relaxation of policy, Britain rejected a Libyan request for Jaguar fighters, Chieftain tanks and submarines during negotiations for a $1.4 billion deal package. The British told the Libyans they could have transport aircraft, frigates and tank transporters instead, but they turned down the offer and broke off negotiations. In 1975, Britain lost another potential order when Saudi Arabia was unwilling to provide assurances that it would not transfer jets to Egypt.

Still, Saudi Arabia remains one of Britain's primary customers, as does Iran, Oman, Jordan and Abu Dhabi.

Weaponry aside, Britain's involvement is manifested in its technical assistance program. Two thousand British technicians and advisors are employed by the Royal Saudi Air Force at a cost of up to $2 billion over a four-year period, and Military Aviation News reported in its February, 1977 edition that the force would be increased by 6,000 within the next few years.

Moreover, since the Arab Military Industrial Organization was established in 1975 with Saudi and Persian Gulf aid, Britain has been involved in intensive discussions with Egypt over the sale and co-production of Hawk light-strike aircraft, Lynx helicopters, anti-tank missiles and electronic equipment.

Unlike France, Britain permits Israel to buy some equipment, and recently the Israeli navy took delivery of a submarine. However, the British did not allow Israel to buy Chieftain tanks, fearing an adverse Arab reaction.

Housing corporation could relieve load

Greater attention needs to be given to easing the burden of the Sabra

By STEPHEN A. VINEBERG

After a three-week visit to Israel, there is no question of our impression of the greatness of the country and its importance to the world. If it is to retain a vibrancy and forward movement, and if we are to continue to help, I would suggest some thought be given to a few new directions of effort by the Diaspora.

To retain his interest in Israel and not to become discouraged to the point of emigrating, greater attention needs to be given to easing the burden of the Sabra. He or she is more important to Israel than all the immigrants. He resents the present program, as he sarcastically puts it, to "give the two 'V's to the Russian immigrant (the Volvo or the villa). We can be of help to rectify this situation. I am not suggesting that we stop helping the Russian, but rather that we start helping the Israeli by shifting emphasis from the few past set areas, to a new pattern, from new and more university buildings to new homes and new financing programs.

We should propose the establishment of a Sabra Housing Corp. that will concentrate its efforts on providing lower cost funds for Israeli citizens who have been in the country for 10 years or more. These people presently receive few, if any, subsidy loans or other privileges.

Recently, loans in Canada guaranteed by Canadians, for funds to be used in Israel have enjoyed a most favorable rate and term. This principle could be applied in this case wherein an Israeli would receive a first mortgage and make blended payments of interest and capital. These and other similar financial programs will do more to help keep Israeli's home, as well as set examples for local banking institutions.

Similar programs should be encouraged in the marketing and retail fields. Israel is advanced in water management and in agro-industrial development; it is slow in the redevelopment of urban marketing. Except for the few magnificent exceptions, such as the expensive rebuilding of Old Jaffo and Mishkenot Sha'anamin, few retail areas have been modernized, or for that matter, maintained. Where new stores have been built, such as in Tel Aviv and Beersheba, the old small boutiques have little, if any competitive edge.

What is needed is a small business loan system tied in with a merchants' association where a block or section of town will submit for renovation loans and follow a joint plan. They would receive certain tax incentives and must adhere to an overall plan. Areas such as Lion Square, and numerable other intersections in Jerusalem, Haifa's Carmel district and commercial sections in smaller towns need such a program to entice the tourist trade, which enjoys a superior purchasing environment at home. It's one thing to spend big dollars in new stores, but dirt and squalor leaves doubt and deadens sales.

Letters to the Editor

Stance on Diaspora Jewry should be saluted: reader

Dear Editor:

Donald Carr in his article on Diaspora leadership must be saluted for his courageous stance vis-a-vis unwavering support for the state of Israel by Diaspora Jewry. In writing, "it is a gross immorality for any Jew outside Israel to give voice to criticism of the enunciated policies of the government of Israel, so long as the state remains in mortal danger," Mr. Carr is attacking The CJN, a paper which has editorially advocated policies not in agreement with the policies of the Jewish state, a paper for which Mr. Carr serves as a director; as well as attacking elected officials of the Canadian Jewish Congress who have recently opposed the official policy of the Begin government in calling in the pages of The CJN for the return of Yehuda and Shomron, an area of Israel that your paper persists in calling the "occupied West Bank".

Dr. Shields in his letter to the editor echoes the same sentiments as Mr. Carr in his discussion of an editorial that appeared in your May 21 issue. Your editorial in that issue constantly refers to a military occupation of Yehuda and Shomron. Amazing! For a pro-Zionist Jewish newspaper to support the language and terminology of our enemies is shocking and irresponsible!

Finally, my esteemed friend, J.B. Salsberg in his column advocates a defeatist policy that is certainly not characteristic of the J.B. Salsberg that I know. In calling for a realistic attitude to the Mideast situation, J.B. writes, "I ask myself, what makes those well-meaning friends think that a biblical quotation or an ancient map is a clinching argument in our disputations with the world?" If realism and logic were the watchword in our disputations with the world, then I submit to you, J.B., the Jewish nation would have ceased to be at many points throughout our history. The Spanish Inquisition, Nazi Germany, and the current plight of the state of Israel and Soviet Jewry are all illustrations where realism and logic did not prevailin our dealings with the will of the world; instead the wildest dreams and hopes of the Jewish people enable it to survive.

'Unity is a must'

Dear Editor:

Thanks, Donald Carr, for telling it like it is, and in print, too. Giving money and acquiring academic degrees are two pursuits whichdo not guarantee wisdom.

The only sane, proper and viable response to questions concerning Israel by Jews who chose the comforts of America over the day-to-day crisis of life in Israel is to keep quiet about matters of which they have little actual knowledge, and no experience whatever.

Only the Jew who puts his life on the line by living in Israel has the right to decide what safety and security mean for him.

If ourleaders and academicians in their hundreds stopped giving "aytzahs" and made aliya instead, we might finally see a new page in Jewish history.

Greta Greisman,

'Congratulations'

Dear Editor:

I want to express my congratulations to Donald Carr for his incisive and courageous artide in the June 9 issue. I agree wholeheartedly with him that it is presumptuous of Diaspora Jews to assume that they understand better than the Israeli leadership the current dangers and political nuances inherent in the negotiating process.

Even more important, at a time when Israel is most alone in an unfriendly world, those who call themselves friends of Israel should prove this friendship by supporting Israel against criticism launched by those who neither care nor understand.

So-called leaders who criticize Israel publicly do the greatest disservice by creating divisiveness among our own people and by providing fuel for anti-Israel argument to the enemies who grasp eagerly at any criticism tossed into the ring.

If we can not depend on unity among ourselves, we can expect chaos in, and a weakening of, our Jewish world.

Mirial Small,
Toronto

'Inept leadership'

Dear Editor:

Congratulations for the front page of your June 9 issue. If this does not prove the basic ineptitude of the self-proclaimed leaders of the Jewish community of Canada, then nothing will. I can't believe that it was by accident that you published side-by-side articles in which, on the one hand, the Canadian Jewish Congress is crying about Canada's less than whole-hearted opposition to the Arab boycott, while the adjacent article reveals that same Congress' lack of courage to proclaim its opposition to a force which threatens to break apart this country.

What is it that our would-be leaders are saying — that it's okay for Canada to go down the drain but on her way she should pause to consider the welfare of Israel?

As a third generation native Canadian-Quebec-Montrealer, I'd like to go on record that a 'leadership' which hasn't the guts to stand up for preservation of this country most certainly does not represent me, and I am not alone in this attitude.

Herb Alexander,
Chomedey, Laval, Que.

'Research necessary'

Dear Editor:

On behalf of the National Retinitis Pigmentosa Foundation, I should like to thank you very much for the excellent interview given in your June 9 issue to Harvey Frankel, a member of our board. It conveys realistically the social and professional problems of living with retinitis pigmentosa and consequently the need for research to find a cure for this blinding eye disease.

I fully realize that often space allotted to an interview does not permit elaboration of certain details. However, in the interests of all concerned I should like to bring to the attention of your readers the following information with regard to the block grant awarded to the Retinitis Pigmentosa Foundation by the Ontario Provincial Lottery.

We were awarded a grant of $175,000 over the next three years "for the specific purpose of providing career support for a senior scientist to conduct and co-ordinate research in Retinitis Pigmentosa in Ontario." The above block grant is not included in our current national fund-raising objective of $250,000 which is required to expand and maintain ongoing research programs in British Columbia, Alberta, Ontario and Quebec. The funds provided by the Ontario Lottery grant, will be used to supplement our resources available for research in Ontario, but by no means to supplant the funding of existing national commitments.

May I take this opportunity of expressing gratitude to many members of our community who have supported our efforts since our inception in 1974. In the same way that the ministry recognizes that research into eye disease is one of its high priority areas for support we hope that the community will respond in the same manner.

Just desserts?

Dear Editor:

The Jewish book award to Raphael Patai for his work, The Jewish Mind is deservingly merited. At long last we do have a very well-researched job disclosing our roots as Jews.

In that same issue of June 9 much praise is heaped on Baal Shem Tov by the good Lubavitcher Rabbi Z. Aaron Grossbaum.

From what Raphael Patai tells us in his book about this same Baal Shem Tov, it leaves one puzzled. Does he really merit the praise?

SOVIETS' SWORD OF DAMOCLES

By TOBA KORENBLUM

It's like waiting for the sword of Damocles — hanging by a fraying hair — to deal its blow. That is the atmosphere of tension and anxiety which frustrates Westerners speculating the outcome of a wave of arrests and trials in the Soviet Union. Diplomatic rhetoric has been cast aside, as the Soviets "test American manhood," the apt description of one White House official. And it is clear that since the Belgrade conference reviewing international human rights was concluded, the Brezhnev regime has embarked on a ruthless campaign to break the backbone of the Jewish activist movement.

In the latest months of muscle-flexing every leading dissident has been rounded up, effectively emasculating the entire membership of the unofficial Helsinki Final Act monitoring committee. A mainstay of the aliya movement, Vladimir Slepak and Ida Nudel, the "guardian angel" of the Prisoners of Conscience, were charged with "malicious hooliganism" last week and sentenced to "internal exile." Yuri Orlov begins to serve 12 years of imprisonment and exile. Scientist Josef Begun, who already served a term of exile for parasitism, is again under arrest. Tbilisi resident Grigory Goldshtein is facing a year of hard labor in a work camp in Velsk.

The latest round of dissident-baiting harks back to the December, 1970 Leningrad trial, where a group of Jews, mostly from Riga, were accused of having plotted to hijack a Soviet airplane to reach Israel. Although death sentences were commuted, the repercussions of that trial were manifested in unbridled anti-Zionism and anti-Semitism. Whatever "thaw" resulted from a brief period of de-Stalinization, it was quickly rechilled then, and the game since has been to test the tolerable limits of dissent.

Roiling the waters at this date is an almost unprecedented invective from U.S. and Soviet leaders through their respective native media. In an effort to shore up sagging polls at home, President Carter has taken less than polite swipes on everything from Soviet military buildup in Europe, the use of Cuban troops as proxy forces in Zaire and other parts of Africa and even Communist ideology. All this came at a ripe time: when NATO allies were meeting to thrash out their allegiance in the face of an apparent imbalance in power with the Warsaw Pact nations; when the United Nations General Assembly was debating nuclear disarmament; when Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko was in Washington to discuss strategic arms limitations with Cyrus Vance and when Leonid Brezhnev was in Prague amidst the arrest of supporters there of the dissident Charter 77 human rights movement.

The subplot coloring the picture further is the arrest and retaliatory detention of Americans in Moscow and two Soviet employees at the United Nations held on espionage charges. As one New York Times analyst put it, spying is back in vogue with the fading of detente. Decisions about the arrest, expulsion or exposure of spies in both countries, and Canada as well, have a diplomatic, rather than pragmatic, rationale. It's much like scratching an itch plaguing international relations.

Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski lashed out at Moscow for violating "the code of detente" in interfering in African affairs. Carter railed at the Soviets, in a biting speech at Annapolis, accusing them of exploiting regional conflict in Africa, violating human rights and exporting "a totalitarian repressive form of government, resulting in a closed society." In the address, viewed by some as contradictory and ambiguous, the president warned that the Soviet Union had to choose between cooperation and confrontation and that the U.S. was "adequately prepared to meet either choice."

Veteran observers have commented on a growing division in the administration between tough-talking Brzezinski and smooth corporation lawyer Vance over handling the Soviets. Pravda, the Communist Party paper, and Brezhnev have already returned the U.S. rebuke in kind. "Brzezinski appears before the entire world," wrote one Russian commentator, "in essence as a foe of detente, an opponent of international co-operation."

The full diplomatic repercussions to the Annapolis speech — which some officials considered overtly jingoistic — are still rippling toward Washington. But disregarding American appeals in the past, the Soviets have moved swiftly to snuff out dissent and Western insults are unlikely to produce a conciliatory mood. The full force of their counter-reaction could fall on the back of Anatoly Scharansky, in prison now over a year, on allegations of treasonable association with the CIA. Although Carter has returned to his critique of Soviet abuse of human rights, fashionable in his earlier days in the White House, he has already found that his latest attempts at bravado have backfired in his face.

Scharansky, Slepak and Nudel are not solitary political scapegoats in the latest East-West tango. A study released earlier this month by the Joint Executive Congressional Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe reveals that since February, 1977, 21 Soviet men and one woman have been punished under a variety of criminal charges. But in fact, says the report "their crime is identical: political dissent expressed in the non-violent, open effort to spur Soviet authorities" to implement Helsinki's human rights provisions.

The Soviets are so sensitive about dissidence in their midst that they manipulate "coverage" of Western protests and are eager to disseminate their view of Scharansky and others. There have been some interesting Canadian twists, which ordinarily would draw smirks, except for the powerful influence of Soviet propaganda at home. Canadian "correspondent" A. Palladin, of Sovietskaya Belorussia, reported last summer about an alleged demonstration in Toronto's Nathan Phillips Square by supposedly disenchanted Russian Jews.

"Canada is the other side of paradise for the Soviet immigrants," read banners carried by the protesters in this fictionalized account. "HIAS is trying to exploit the poverty of the Jews from the USSR who have immigrated to Canada in anti-Soviet aims," the account told Russian readers.

The press office of the USSR embassy in Ottawa regularly releases bulletins with stories denouncing Western protests on behalf of Soviet dissidents. One such article, "Jews in the USSR", claims that the Soviet Union has 70 writers whose works are "in the Yiddish language and published regularly in large editions;" that "Jewish worshippers attend synagogues and perform all the rites prescribed by Judaism without any interference" and that "the authorities do not plant any obstacles in the way of Jews wishing to leave for Israel."

Igor Lobanov, an assistant press attache in the Soviets Ottawa embassy — who was singled out but not expelled for spying activities this year — actually sent The Canadian Jewish News three articles casting aspersions on Scharansky and his wife Avital. She was described as "an adventuress who brazenly assumed another name and became a 'star' in a cheap propaganda show for hand-outs from the Zionist organizations and the CIA," and "foment(ed) an anti-Soviet campaign based on lies and insinuations." Wrote Lobanov, in April, to The CJN's editor: "Your reaction (to the stories enclosed) would be very helpful to us in selecting future material for your newspaper."

It's not Slepaks or Nudels, but Soviets who are hooligans

By J.B. SALSBERG

The latest political weapon that the men of the Kremlin are using in their war against the Russian Jews is the cynical and vindictive charge of "malicious hooliganism."

A veritable avalanche of such charges are now falling on the vanguard of the Soviet Jewish community that spearheads the battle for the internationally acknowledged right to leave the country of their unhappiness. Let it be crystal clear that the "hooliganism" charges are being laid against people who have committed no crime and who have violated no Soviet law.

But those charged under this travesty of a law were sentenced to prison or to long years of exile in the remote regions of the Soviet Union — away from family, friends and social and cultural life.

The latest to face the vindictive "hooliganism" charges were Vladimir Slepak, the courageous and prominent Jewish activist, and Ida Nudel, the most active woman Refusenik. Both were tried in a closed court in the morning and by the afternoon they were sentenced to five and four years of exile, respectively. Family, friends and foreign press representatives who waited outside the court were dispersed with the aid of a water hose.

Whatever Slepak, Nudel and the others did would be considered as strictly within the law in every civilized country. They tried to speak out against the denial of their rights — rights guaranteed by the International Charter of Human Rights which was also signed by the Soviet Union.

One of the rights guaranteed by the International Charter is the right to leave one's country or the right to return to it. The Slepaks, Nudels and scores of other activists have been denied this right. For trying to protest such denials they are made jobless, they suffer inhuman harassments, and now the mighty men of the Kremlin banish them to the inhospitable hinterland, thousands of miles from their homes and friends.

The normal mind cannot fathom the distorted logic of the Soviet authorities. I find their anti-Jewish policy — from the denial of rights to leave to the dissemination of Czarist and Hitlerite anti-Semitic poison — to be a frightful display of brutish defiance of world opinion.

They shocked the world recently when they sentenced physicist Yuri Orlov to 12 years loss of his freedom. What was Orlov's crime? It was, they say, the crime of "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda." Yuri Orlov was, of course, only monitoring Russia's violations of human rights, rights guaranteed by the International Charter and the Helsinki Agreement.

We join, of course, with the countless men of science and of goodwill around the world in protesting the Soviet crime against Orlov and others like him. But our own Jewish problem is, however, somewhat different. The Jewish Soviet activists do not seek to change or shake the foundations of Soviet dictatorship. They want to be allowed to leave and to join their relatives and friends in Israel and elsewhere.

What brought the latest punitive measures against the activists? Desperate after waiting and suffering because of the denial of their appeals for the right to leave, they prepared for another public expression of their grievance.

A group of Jewish women — mostly Refuseniks — decide to demonstrate peacefully on Russia's Children's Day together with their children. They notified the authorities in advance of their intention and of the time and place of their planned public appearance. The reply was the concentration of police before the homes of all who were involved. Some homes were raided and ransacked. Most of the activists were forcibly prevented from leaving their homes.

As a result, some of the families, whose prepared signs had not been torn or confiscated by the police, hung the signs from their windows or balconies that faced the street. This so enraged the police and their neighborhood stooges that homes were broken into, signs torn and charges of "malicious hooliganism" were laid. The Slepaks, who live on one of Moscow's main streets, also displayed their sign that read "Let us go to Israel" from the balcony of their apartment.

For that democratic, perfectly legal action, Slepak and Nudel were exiled. The Kremlin has shown its most cynical and cruel face.

But the most stirring event took place in front of the home of the well known Jewish activist, Gregory Rosenstein. On the day of the police seige of activists' homes, Rosenstein tried to leave his residence. In front of the building was a howling crowd and on the sidewalk was painted a blood-curdling sign. "Jews to the cemetery."

Rosenstein, on seeing the sign, returned to his apartment and in a few minutes returned wearing his talit and began praying on the spot where the anti-Semitic death threat was painted...

This electrifying scene deserves to be immortalized by great painters and poets.

No, it isn't the Slepaks, the Nudels or the Rosensteins who are the hooligans; it is the men in the Kremlin who order or permit such crimes. It is they who are the hooligans in Moscow.

PASSOVER IN CHINA

What may have been the first Passover seder in China since 1949 was held by 32 men, women and children from more than a dozen countries, in a hotel banquet hall in Canton, China. This year, Passover occured during the Canton Spring Fair, a trade show of Chinese products attended by businessmen from all over the world. One of those businessmen, Victor DeLoya of New York, a leader in the American Sephardi community, initiated and conducted the seder. He also planned the menu, improvising with various food products to create the proper Passover dishes.

A Haggada and matza were provided by Canadian tourists and two bottles of Carmel wine came from a Chinese woman from Hong Kong who heard about the seder. According to DeLoya, the seder was well received by government officials, and he felt it served as a precedent for future events to meet the needs of Jewish businessmen and tourists in the country. In 1941 there were about 25,000 Jews in China, but after World War II nearly all left. There are virtually no Jews now in the People's Republic of China.

JERUSALEM —

"This year, the kibbutz had a grandiose celebration for Shavuot," recalled Yoram Yair, co-ordinator of Kibbutz Ramat Rahel's orchards, on the outskirts of Jerusalem.

Afro-haired Yoram spoke in that quiet, irony-tinged tone Israelis use when they refuse to give way to displays of overt enthusiasm, but have cause for pride, all the same.

The celebration to which he referred, was the kibbutz first-fruit festival — the contemporary heir of the ancient custom of bringing the bikurim — the newly-harvested produce of the season, to the Temple in Jerusalem.

This year's festivities focussed on a presentation of the latest innovations introduced into each branch of production on the veteran, 52-year-old kibbutz, as well as a display of Ramat Rahel's choicest produce.

The new equipment, produce, and tableaux, mounted on tractor-drawn trailers, circled the kibbutz, taking in the sparkling new swimming pool and tennis courts, and ending on the dining-hall lawn, where it was greeted by kibbutz members, visitors and volunteers.

There was folkdancing and music, performed by the young people of the kibbutz, and the children were dressed in traditional, white, holiday clothes, and crowned with garlands of flowers.

Rounding off the display, was a competition between the various sectors of the kibbutz, in which produce, production methods, and equipment were judged.

Prizes? "A bar of chocolate, or a bottle of cola — funny prizes like that," grinned Yoram mischeviously. "We don't like to make a big thing of competitiveness here."

Another egalitarian kibbutz ideal still holds in Ramat Rahel's new and beautiful dining hall. When I asked for the supervisor of the kitchen, I was told by Shula Eshkoli, who works there: "There isn't one — no one likes bosses. We work as a team here."

Freckled, darkly-attractive, and very pregnant Shula, said the kibbutz had a dairy meal for Shavuot. On the menu were piping hot burekas, (triangular flaky pastry puffs, filled with cheese or potato, and scattered with sesame seeds).

In addition: several varieties of fresh vegetable salads, and every conceivable kind of Israeli cheese. "Cheese obviously calls for wines," smiled Shula. "And since the strawberries were still good, we served portions of them, topped with sour cream — nothing could be nicer than that."

Shula hadn't forgotten cheesecakes, and she gave me the recipes for two: a refrigerator cake, made with wine-dipped marie biscuits, and topped with chocolate icing, and a very unusual recipe for a cheesecake made with cream-of-wheat, and a plum topping, served warm from the oven.

Ramat Rahel Refrigerator Cheesecake

1 lb. cream cheese
1 2 cup sugar
3 4 cup instant vanilla pudding (made up)
few drops rum
36 marie biscuits, dipped in sweet Kiddush wine
cooking chocolate

1. arrange wine-dipped biscuits in three rows of four biscuits each, lying closely side-by-side

2. combine cream cheese, sugar, vanilla pudding and rum, and spread over biscuits. Repeat with two more layers of biscuits

3. now bring outer rows of biscuits together to form a triangular shape, meeting in the centre. This will be easier if there is a cloth or aluminum foil under the biscuit layers, to aid in lifting them up

4. melt cooking chocolate in sufficient quantity to coat cake, or just to drizzle over it. Pour over cake, and refrigerate till required. This cake cuts very attractively

* * * * * * * * *

Ramat Rahel Hot Plum Cheesecake

2 lbs. skim milk cheese
3 tblsps. melted margarine
3 eggs
1 4 cup flour
2 1 2 tblsps. semolina (cream-of-wheat)
pinch salt, sugar to taste
2 lbs. ripe, dark, prune plums, pitted and halved

1. combine, beating well, all ingredients except plums. Grease with margarine an oven-sized baking tray, and scatter with finely-crushed, toasted breadcrumbs

2. turn mixture into tray and smooth down. Place rows of plums atop the mixture. The cheese batter will puff up around the plums, and the plums will color the cheese mixture, giving the cake a very attractive appearance when baked

3. place in a medium oven and bake 30—45 mins. or till set, puffed, and lightly gilded. Serve hot or warm

A note from Amnon Gil-Ad, former director of the Israel Government Tourist Office in Canada, tells us that "after 20 years in the service of my country, I have decided to take leave, join the industry and become a tour operator." Gil-Ad, who returned to Israel two years ago, has joined Isratours in Jerusalem. The firm, he is quick to point out, is not a travel agency, but a tour operator handling incoming traffic only and specializing in professional groups, seminars and in-depth itineraries for groups with special requirements.

Alternatives for the elderly

By VIVIEN SHARON

TORONTO — Ida Cohen (a fictitious name), 71, has been severely stricken with arthritis since childhood. Having no children, and having lost her husband years ago, Ida was totally alone except for a few friends that checked in on her occasionally.

Two years ago, her situation became critical. On bad days, she could not move about her apartment, her hands crippled with pain, her body stiff. She was unable to shop, cook, clean, bathe or clothe herself properly. The aid of a wheelchair and came only helped minimally.

By referral from her doctor, Ida's case came to the attention of the Co-ordinated Services to Jewish Elderly. Ida's situation was assessed and a social worker placed her in the services' homemaking program, designed to help temporarily, or chronically-ill, or disabled adults with those aspects of personal care, meal preparation and housekeeping which the person and/or family are unable to provide.

Now, two years later, Ida's mental attitude and physical condition have improved substantially. Two afternoons weekly, from 1 until 5, a homemaker comes to her apartment. She buys groceries, cooks, performs light housekeeping, attends to her personal needs and keeps her company. In the summer, they take walks together.

Harriet and Sam Finkle (fictitious names) have also received help from the homemakers program.

Last year, Harriet, 82, was on vacation with her husband, Sam, 81, when she accidentally fell and broke her hip. Immobile following surgery, and subsequently unable to function at home during the recuperative process, their daughter, living in London, Ont., brought the case to the CSJE.

For the past year, a Jewish homemaker has been visiting the Finkles two afternoons weekly, assisting them in running the household. As a result, a close friendship has developed and Harriet's condition is much improved.

Many of the clients are depressed, unable to cope with illness, retirement and loneliness, said staff social worker Nurith Feldman, co-ordinator of the homemakers program.

"Our organization is unique in that there is no waiting list. If necessary, we hire more homemakers," she told The Canadian Jewish News. But Ms. Feldman went on to say that "clients can't get too spoiled by us either. Should their condition no longer require our (CSJE) services, they will be taken off the program."

Michael Scheinert, executive director of CSJE, analyzed the program's rationale this way: "We must realize that older people want to stay in their homes, where they are most comfortable and familiar, rather than be institutionalized. They do not like to be cut off from the community, and, in most cases, with proper preventive care, their health can be adequately maintained and illness delayed," he said.

Scheinert said that the next decade or two will show a marked change in the acculturation, professional and educational awareness of its elderly. "They are not going to accept the patronizing attitude of most institutions."

Aya Dinstein (centre seated), former chairman of the Women's International Zionist Organization, speaks to members of Israel Bonds women's prime minister and trustees divisions. Others from left are Gail Green, Leona Finkler, Sheilah Silverberg, chairman of the women's division, and Elaine Kay, luncheon hostess.

'We can't relinquish territories for vague promises of peace'

TORONTO —

Israeli leaders must think 100 times before they can lightly assume the responsibility of territorial concessions for vague Arab promises of peace, Aya Dinstein, former chairman of the World WIZO executive, told a luncheon meeting recently.

The luncheon, held at the home of Elaine Kay, was the first under the combined sponsorship of Toronto Israel Bonds women's division prime minister's club and trustees.

Women's division chairman for 1978 is Sheilah Silverberg. Prime minister's club chairman is Gail Green and trustees chairman is Leona Finkler.

In a hard-hitting and emotional speech, Mrs. Dinstein told the meeting that in the interim agreement of 1975, Israel returned the Abu Rodeis oil fields for an assurance of continued arms from the U.S. Three years later, Israel received the necessary arms, but only as part of the U.S. arms package which also supplied advanced fighter planes to Saudi Arabia.

"This is not a package deal, it was a double-deal," Mrs. Dinstein commented.

Aya Dinstein is the wife of Israel's economic minister to Canada and the U.S., Zvi Dinstein. Speaking about Israel Bonds, she said that the loan dollars supplied to the Jewish state was the lifeline of her economy and reminded the audience of Israel's crucial need for outside resources.

"We have already suffered one Holocaust. When the day of peace with our neighbors finally arrives, let us be sure there will be enough Jews to celebrate," she said.

ation's impetus, he said: "We have recognized that the majority of older people in Metro do not require institutionalization. Only 7% need nursing home and hospital care. Of the remaining 93%, 15% require some element of supportive service, and that is the service that CSJE is providing.

"By providing supportive programs for physical, psychological, social and intellectual needs for its senior citizens, the agency is rapidly gaining a reputation as one of the leaders in the provision and development of community awareness for its elderly."

The four essential home support programs directed to "at-risk" seniors are kosher meals-on wheels, homemaking, housekeeping and safety care companionship, said Jerry Berman, supervisor of CSJE's home support services. "These services respond to the elderly's most fundamental needs, enabling them to stay in their own home," he said.

The fee for the homemakers program is $15 for each four-hour unit of service, but the agency has subsidies and accepts a minimum of $3 for each four-hour unit.

CSJE, which is an independent, multi-purpose agency, has been serving the needs of Metro's elderly for the past three years. Previously, its functions came under the auspices of the United Jewish Welfare Fund.

Having embarked on a capital campaign from May 1 to June 30, CSJE anticipates nearing its goal of $60,000, if not surpassing it, as the deadline approaches, said campaign co-chairmen David Goldstein and Walter Bick.

Funded by the provincial Ministry of Community and Social Services, the municipality of Metro Toronto, United Way, and fees for service, the agency has a staff of 38, including 12 social workers, 20 homemakers, four housekeepers and support staff.

It offers a broad range of programs, in addition to home help services, including: assessment and referral; volunteer visiting; specialized job placement; volunteer development; special outreach programs; leisure services; under its umbrella organization, the Association of Jewish Senior Clubs; information resources; advocacy and social action.

Bondholders all, is motto for BB

TORONTO —

"Every member a Bondholder" was the motto adopted by representatives of 21 B'nai B'rith lodges at a regional council meeting held recently to plan the Israel Bond program for 1978.

Charles Goldlust, Israel Bond chairman of the Toronto Regional Council of B'nai B'rith, urged all lodges to hold Bond sales functions and, to date, 10 lodges have planned events for the fall campaign to facilitate sales.

Guest speakers at the meeting was Moe Appel, recently retired national executive director of Israel Bonds for Canada. Appel, long involved in Canadian-Jewish life for over 30 years, was also the first Jewish representative at the United Nations at the time of formation.

Also in attendance at the meeting were Sam Goldberg, regional president, Michael Barkash, first vice-president and Joe Shabes, a dedicated member-at-large.

Rosenwald established Sears, Roebuck & Co.

landmark events in our history

By ROCHELLE CARR

At the turn of the century, the watchword of the American economy was "laissez-faire". In the east, customers flocked to newly-established stores. However, in the wide open spaces of the west, initially there was difficulty in bringing the customer and entrepreneur together, until the mail-order business came on the scene.

No name is more closely linked with the mail-order catalogue than that of Julius Rosenwald.

The man who built up the firm of Sears, Roebuck and Company into a multi-million dollar concern was born in Springfield, Ill. on Aug. 12, 1862. When his father, Samuel, arrived in the U.S. in 1854, he followed the practice of most German immigrants — he became a peddler. From there he continued the pattern by exchanging his nomadic existence for that of a shopkeeper. His small clothing concern afforded his family of four sons and two daughters a comfortable life.

Young Julius happily helped out. He was equally content with the small clothing store he opened in New York City and would have stayed there had it not been for the latest interest of his brother-in-law, Aaron Nussbaum. Aaron had heard about an opportunity to buy half the interest of a mail-order house, called Sears, Roebuck, for $75,000.

With the help of his family, Julius invested $37,500, sharing the expense with his brother-in-law. For that, he was made vice-president of the company. From a historical viewpoint, the catalogue, now increasingly under the watchful and imaginative eye of Rosenwald, actually helped open up the west. Goods, with a money-back guarantee, became more accessible to the farmers, ranchers and smalltown dwellers.

From a personal point of view, the catalogue business made Rosenwald one of America's wealthiest philanthropic citizens. By 1925, several people had been bought out, including his brother-in-law, and new faces were brought in.

Rosenwald was made chairman of the board, a post he retained until his death on Jan. 6, 1932. Also by 1925, his original investment had risen to the astronomical figure of $150 million with over 40 million catalogues sent out annually.

He expanded the catalogue company to include a chain of retail stores across the country. While his business boomed, so too did his involvement in charities. Although he never became a Zionist, he did contribute to various enterprises in Palestine including Aaron Aaronsohn's agricultural experimental station in Haifa. He sent several million dollars to help settle Jews on farms in northern Russia.

One of his most noteworthy contributions was to the black community. Through his efforts and generosity, over 5,000 schools in 15 states were opened up for black children.

The complexity of his philanthropy became so great that, in 1917, he organized it all under the Julius Rosenwald Fund.

Mimi Wise to head Jewish book fair

TORONTO —

Mimi Wise has been appointed co-ordinator of the Toronto Jewish Book Fair, to be held this year at the Northern 'Y' Nov. 4-12.

Mrs. Wise told The Canadian Jewish News that the emphasis this year will be on youth and children's books. "We must enhance our libraries at home so that our children can understand our unique heritage and history," she said. "What better way to learn than through the fascinating world of Jewish books."

Born and raised here, Mrs. Wise is a graduate of the University of Toronto, and a past president of Toronto Hadassah-WIZO. She is married to Dr. Syd Wise, and they have two sons.

She feels strongly about volunteerism. "Where else can one get the training, experience, meet fascinating people and learn at first hand what is happening in the world around you," she explained.

"There is something to be said for the excitement of seeing plans and ideas take shape, build momentum and come to a successful conclusion."

sparks from the torah

By RABBI MEIR GOTTESMAN

Parshat Shlach Lecha/Rosh Chodesh Tammuz (Wednesday, Thursday)

Tova ha'aretz m'od m'od... It is an exceedingly good land...

Charity is very precious — especially when it gets to where it's supposed to.

The Brisker Rav used to send out mishullachim (collecters) for his great yeshiva. Before they left he had to give them travelling money, and when they returned he had to provide additional travelling expenses plus commission.

When he saw how little he had left for the yeshiva, he said: "Now I understand when the Almighty told Moses to send out spies to search out Eretz Yisrael, he said, 'send out spies v'yaturu...' V'yaturu means spy out, but v'yaturu also means to leave over...After these first mishullachim go out collecting all over the Holy Land, they should leave a little over in the collection plate for the Jews, after all the expenses and commission are deducted..." (Fun Unzer Alten Ojtzer)

* * * *

The greatest charity is to speak kindly about others — in front of them and behind their backs.

Consider...when Moses was about to send out the 12 spies to search out Israel, he smelled something fishy. They were cooking up a plot to defame the Holy Land. His disciple Hoshea was among them, and to protect him against their conspiracy, he changed his name to Joshua and prayed: "G-d should save you from the counsel of the spies..."

But Moses was a prophet, wasn't he? Didn't he see that later the people would try to stone Joshua, kill him? Why didn't he utter a prayer to protect him against their stones?

But it shows...Moses was more worried about a Jewish conspiracy than about stones. A bad tongue is the most dangerous thing in the world. Against stones you can protect yourself, but how can you save yourself when someone pats you on the back with a false smile, and then behind your back whispers the worst lies?

People think they get away with lies, and lashon hora. How can anyone be caught with a falsehood? But the Almighty counts every word of falsehood, stores it away, and after 120 years, a person will have to give an account of everything. (Rabbi Yonasan Aibschutz, who himself suffered from many false calumnies in his life.)

* * * *

Our rabbis warned to be careful of politicians who smile at election time, and then turn their backs later.

When the Jews were picking their representatives to serve as spies, there was one to a tribe. In one place Rashi says that the spies were as much set on evil when they left on their mission, as when they returned. But somewhere else, the same Rashi says, that "oso sha'ah kshairim hayu...at the time of setting forth they were good Jews." How can that be? If they were already conspiring, how were they good Jews?

But it shows...in their hearts, they already were set on double-crossing, changing policy. But when it came to being nominated and elected as the representative, kshairim hayu...they suddenly become the Jew's best friend, ardent supporters of Israel. Later they stabbed Israel in the back —still smiling. (Sichas Chachomin)

V'hamaivin yavin.

Rav Nachman of Breslov was sitting with his disciples. He let out a sigh. "A Jew must reach Eretz Yisrael, a Jew must reach Eretz Yisrael..."

When he saw his students murmering, trying to read mystical interpretations, he said: "No, I don't mean a mystical Eretz Yisrael. I mean the real Eretz Yisrael — its fields, its gardens, its stones..."

May we greet the Messiah in Jerusalem soon. Shabbat Shalom.

Germans honor Franz Oppenheimer

By CHAIM YEHUDA

By CHAIM YEHUDA

In 1964, West Germany issued a special stamp marking the birth centenary of Franz Oppenheimer (1864-1943), physician, economist and sociologist. This yellow-olive stamp is typographed against a white background and perforated 14.

Oppenheimer, the son of a Reform rabbi, started out his career as a physician, soon graduated in economics and subsequently held the chair in sociology in the University of Frankfurt. One of his students was Ludwig Erhard, who later served as chancellor of West Germany.

Oppenheimer's work in sociology concerned the ownership of land, and the accumulation of wealth and power, which he believed resulted in social conflict due to inequities among the various groups in society.

In 1903, soon after meeting with Herzl, Oppenheimer addressed the Sixth Zionist Congress regarding the application of his ideas to land settlement in Palestine.

An experimental cooperative village was founded at Merhavia, in Galilee in 1911. Although this venture did not prove successful, Oppenheimer is regarded as one of the theoretical founders of the kibbutz system.

During World War I, Oppenheimer was chairman of a committee of mainly German Zionist leaders, who were concerned about the situation of Jews in Russian territory occupied by the Germans.

In 1938 Oppenheimer was forced to leave his academic post and settled in Los Angeles.

Incoming president Sherman Hans takes the gavel from Lillie Herlick, immediate past president, at the annual meeting of the Toronto Hebrew Re-Establishment Services. The agency loans needed funds.

Agency loans total $5.5 million

TORONTO —

Boris Lwowich, Andrej Kreutz and Victor Jacobson have been living in Canada for two, four and 25 years respectively. Kreutz is from Poland, the other two are Russian Jews. They met for the first time at the recent bi-annual meeting of the Toronto Hebrew Re-Establishment Services, where they shared recollections of the financial and moral assistance they had received from the agency when they were at their lowest ebb and there was no where else to turn.

Their experiences pointedly illustrate what Sherman Hans, newly-elected president, and Lillie Herlick, immediate past-president, stated is the overriding credo of the agency: "That it is founded upon the dignity of people in need and that it is not a charitable organization."

In her final report, Mrs. Herlick told the meeting that in the 54 years since its inception, the THRS has made loans totalling $5.5 million to thousands of families.

THRS is an affiliate agency of Toronto Jewish Congress which contributes to help support operating expenses, and along with the United Jewish Relief Agency, provides funds for the scholarship-in-aid program. The latter is administered by THRS.

Mrs. Herlick informed the meeting that, despite the close co-operation the agency has enjoyed with United Way, which provides funds for administrative costs, "we have had mounting deficits for the last 12 years." To offset the deficits, she said, a membership drive was initiated to augment income to meet expenses.

"In terms of dollars and cents," Mrs. Herlick went on, "we have had generous benefactors who have left bequests and legacies, as well as generous contributions from our members. This constitutes our capital fund which is constantly in circulation."

During her association with THRS, Mrs. Herlick said she had witnessed "a changing spectrum of applicants." Since the Second World War, the influx of immigrants have come from Hungary, Morocco, Czechoslovakia, Israel and, now the Soviet Union.

"In the beginning, most of those who came for assistance were unskilled factory workers. Now the typical immigrant is of professional and white-collar calibre...doctors, dentists, technicians, engineers, musicians and many other skilled individuals. Many attempt to go into business ventures and it is here that our loan committee and board, who have know-how and business acumen, can advise and guide them."

In addition to Sherman Hans, incoming president, other officers elected were: Jack Zippan, vice-president; Jack Kosoy, treasurer; and J.C. Oelbaum, honorary treasurer.

Bar Mitzva ceremony is first in many years

TORONTO —

On Saturday morning, June 17, 1978, Andrew Fenn, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Fenn, and Jonathan Frankel, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Frankel, were called to the Torah on the occasion of their Bar Mitzva. The ceremony was held in the auditorium of the Peretz School, the first time in recent memory that a Bar Mitzva has been conducted on it's premises.

Because of the special nature of the event, students and staff of the Community Hebrew Academy were called upon to organize and conduct traditional Sabbath services. Members of the academy's religious affairs committee, under the leadership of Jeffrey Bernholtz, a student in Grade 11 at the academy, conducted the service in its entirety, acting as rabbis, cantors, and Torah readers, and preparing the Bar Mitzva boys to read from the Torah and the Haftorah.

Bernholtz was assisted by Pierre Ber, Benjy Berglas, Michael Greenberg, and Harold Reiter, also students at the academy.

CHAT Student Activities Co-ordinator Gary Levine and Vice-Principal Rabbi Steven Lorch were also instrumental in ensuring the success of the event.

Levine and Lorch termed the occasion a significant milestone for both the Peretz School affiliated with the Workman's Circle, and the Community Hebrew Academy. For the Peretz School, the Bar Mitzva contributed an added dimension to their educational program; for the academy, its participation provided an opportunity to be truly a community school by serving the larger Jewish community as a resource. It is hoped that this event will become a model for similar co-operative ventures in the future.

Kosher tour is answer to vacationer's dilemma

By LARRY FROMMER

How to travel and keep kashrut, particularly when kosher restaurants are not readily available, is one of the perpetual dilemmas of the Jewish vacationer who subscribes faithfully to dietary practices.

To the rescue this summer are three specialists in kosher tours: Geller-Howard, Olam Travel and Atlas International Tours, which market their packages through retail travel agencies. It must be pointed out that because of their very special dimensions, these packages are not cheap.

In addition to providing participants with glatt kosher meals, they endeavor to include in the sightseeing portion attractions of indigenous Jewish interest and to choose hotels on the basis of their proximity to kosher meals or their capacity to maintain a kosher kitchen.

Geller-Howard, for instance, features two appealing kosher packages this summer — Kosher California and Kosher Europe. The former is a 12-day trip to San Francisco, Los Angeles and Las Vegas with departures on June 18; July 2, 9 and 23 and Aug. 20.

The package, priced at $688 per person double occupancy, includes breakfast and dinner daily with three meals on the Shabbat, accommodations with private bath, sightseeing with private guide, personal escort, entrance fees, transfers and all service charges and taxes. The air fare is additional but those departing from New York City enjoy a low group fare of $341.50. The Kosher Europe Tour is 15 days and includes Zurich, London and Amsterdam with departures on June 26, July 10, July 24 and Aug. 14. The price of the land portion, which includes hotel accommodations, visits to sites of Jewish interest, transfers, kosher continental breakfasts daily plus three kosher meals on Shabbat, service charges and taxes, is $814 per person double occupancy. The group air fare from New York is $604.

Kol-Am is offering a veritable cornucopia of western kosher tours which include accommodations, sightseeing, three kosher meals daily, transfers and escort.

Based on a per person, double occupancy price, they are: Coastal California, Yosemite and the High Sierras, July 2 and 9, 14 nights, $899; California, Las Vegas and High Sierras, July 13, 14 nights, $859; Coastal California, Las Vegas and San Diego, July 16, 11 nights, $679; California, Las Vegas and the Grand Canyon, Aug. 14 and 21, 10 nights, $679 and Traditional Highland Mexico, July 23, 11 nights at $699.

Also on the Kol-Am summer agenda is a kosher cruise through the Alaska Inside Passage on the S.S. Universe departing from Vancouver, July 23, for 14 days. The price of the cruise begins at $795 per person, double occupancy, plus a supplement for four kosher meals daily.

Atlas tours is into the Jewish "roots" syndrome with a series of circle tours to Spanish cities which flourished during the 15th century Golden Age. The 14 day tours, scheduled to depart weekly beginning in early July, will visit Cordoba, Granada, Madrid and Palma. The price, per person, double occupancy, including round trip air fare from New York, is $950.

Atlas will also conduct a seven-day kosher tour to Palma alone, during which time participants will be accommodated at the luxurious seaside Demar Hotel, which maintains a year-round kosher kitchen. The price of this package has not yet been announced.

In July and August, Atlas will conduct 14-day circle tours of California and Las Vegas which will include two novel features: participants will personally meet Hollywood and Las Vegas celebrities and they will be permitted to select their daily menus in advance of the trip. Prices will be announced shortly.

Number one fan

By WANDA WINTROBE

TORONTO —
Marty Greenberg is the Toronto Blue Jays' number one fan. He holds the distinction of being their first fan — in advance of the baseball club ever playing a game.

All season, Greenberg is first into CNE Stadium for every evening and weekend Toronto-scheduled game. It's the anticipation of being there before the gates open that "keys" him up for the game. He rushes in, hours early, to talk to players in the dugout and hangs around the parking lot afterwards, waiting for his heroes to emerge. They all know him. He's had several to his home for dinner.

Greenberg is the hard-working president of the Jays Booster Club. Last year, he sat through sun, rain, fog, snow, sleet and hail to watch the Blue Jays.

At one time, the 29-year-old super fan aspired to a baseball career, hoping to wear an outfielder's glove because of his good throwing arm. As a kid, he played for 10 years at Christie Pits Park with the Columbus Boys Club. In 1967, he worked out alongside the now defunct Toronto Maple Leaf baseball team and was one of the 821 fans who witnessed their final game. He has retained the ticket stub and his Leaf Booster Club membership card, both of which have since become valuable souvenirs. Greenberg labels himself a collector of junk — or in fancy terms — "baseball memorabilia". His collection includes: bats, souvenir hats, autographed balls, schedules of every baseball club, RC Cola cans with baseball players on top and ticket stubs for opening and closing season days.

After extensively researching the operation of booster clubs in both leagues, he patterned his club on the Detroit Tigers format. He now has a growing membership of 1,500 devotees. Although he estimates that over 50% of Blue Jay ticket subscribers are Jewish, the opposite is true of his booster supporters.

The strictly voluntary effort by Greenberg and his staff of three friends keeps them busy seven-nights-a-week from 8 p.m. to 12 midnight. They write and assemble newsletters, organize social evenings and trips following the baseball circuit and supply tickets to out-of-town groups. Last year, the Boosters moved 5,000 tickets, giving the Jays $20,000 worth of business. One of Greenberg's innovations this year is the $10 family club membership.

He points out that the presence of the Blue Jay team in Toronto has already generated $50 million worth of business in the downtown core.

Arts

(Leo Hausman photo)

One of the works of the late Harvey Kelman, who died in 1970 at age of 59.

Expressionist works reveal a thoughtful, disciplined artistry

art

By RHONDA ROVAN

Harry Kelman was a prolific artist, a sensitive documenter of real people — the common folk he encountered throughout his life. But his art work was a private matter, a course he followed with little fanfare or publicity. Many of his friends never even knew of his achievements, said Olga Kelman, who gathered together 300 of her late husband's works for a private three-day exhibit and sale last week.

Many of the works shown were executed in Paris where Olga met the Russian-born artist, and where he spent 10 years studying and developing the technique of oil on paper. The works, in the expressionist mode, are forceful, emotive and reveal a thoughtful, disciplined artistry.

Among his subjects have been two women dancing cheek-to-cheek in a Paris nightclub, a strong-jawed, fierce-looking concierge, a little boy selling flowers and women treasure-hunting in Paris garbage cans. This is poignant, compassionate work that stimulates the imagination — you sense a story behind each subject.

Kelman's subjects were also the victims of concentration camps. He visited the camps when they were liberated by American soldiers, and he applied the same unpretentious, honest vision to his depictions of what he found there, as he did to his street scenes. The results were appropriately disturbing, but not exploitative. The exhibit included works painted in Israel, and in Ottawa, to where Kelman emigrated.

Mainly represented in private collections in Paris, London and New York, Kelman was 59 when he died in 1970. At the time of his death, he was art director of the Canadian Labor Congress, where his design work and posters won him international awards. His commercial work was as important to him as his fine art, says his wife, now living in Toronto.

The exhibit was held at the home of Nicole and Reuben Benchitrit, 267 Burbank Drive, Willowdale. You can arrange to see Kelman's art by phoning the Benchitrits at 226-6101, or Mrs. Kelman at 881-2388.

Poetry of love of Israel

books

By BERNARD BASKIN

With Love To The Land
By Carolyn Grad
Prism House Press
Toronto $3

The land of Israel is thick and rich with historic memories and associations. Beneath each layer of echoing consciousness is another — and another.

For the poet in search of reverberations and impressions, the country can be intoxicating. How does one drink it all in — from the fabled walls of Jerusalem to the clinging outposts of Safad, purple and green in the sun? At one time, the inconstant countryside is alive with flame and color; another time it appears barren, rocky, and forsaken.

Carolyn Grad is a Torontonian who visited the Holy Land and was suffused with immemorial longings and feelings. For her it is "a place where everything surges upwards...the people too walk taller."

Her brief, simple, lyric statements are largely about cities and places. But there is also a poem about a beggar "whose face is a roadmap of Jerusalem" and about Shabbat with "the soft shadows of candles wavering on dark walls" and about the Orthodox residents of Jerusalem, "black hat, black curls, long black coat against which dance the frings, white. Wrapped and held within, they move unaware, in straight lines."

The famous windmill near the King David Hotel strikes her as "foreign, out of context, alien in the land." At the Dome of the Rock with its "gold, hand-painted Byzantine blue tiles" she inhales the "strong foot odor of unshod pilgrims" and hears a "guard shrieking in Arabic at one who thoughtlessly spit."

The Carmelite in Haifa, the funicular subway that runs down from Mount Carmel to the Harbour, elicits this impression: "Chain from top to Bottom. Little Dinky Toy Carmelit slips from Carmel to Port Swiftly linking clear pine-scented hill Painlessly to Muggy Harbour."

At Yad Vashem she is pursued by the "twisted terror (that) crawls off the walls" and at Mea Shearim she wonders: "Do the many Gates open to Joy" and "what other cover is there for the way things seem?"

The 50 or so poems that make up this soft-covered, slender volume are well-crafted, and imbued with feeling and sincerity. They deserve a wide readership. The book can be obtained by writing directly to the publisher, 2200 Avenue Rd., Suite 701, Toronto, M5M 4B9, or from the Jewish bookstores.
